

Amy Wilson

Neurosciences Researcher, Sheffield Institute for Translational Neuroscience.
MBBS, BMedSci

Amy Wilson completed her undergraduate medical degree at Sheffield University in 2019. As a medical student, Amy developed an interest in studying historical perspectives of the mental health and wellbeing of clinicians. Her intercalated undergraduate degree (BMedSci) focused around the medical humanities and study of clinician narratives of illness.

Amy is an active member of The Medical Humanities Sheffield (MHS) <http://mhs.group.shef.ac.uk> which brings together Faculties of Medicine, Arts and Humanities, Social Sciences, and Engineering and clinicians in the Sheffield Teaching Hospitals, the Children's Hospital, and Primary Care. She is an advocate for exploring all issues relating to the well-being of mind and body in societies past and present.

Amy presented her undergraduate research at the Wounded Healer conference in London, October 2018, an event supported by the Practitioner Health Programme. Thereafter, Amy's research was published in The Lancet in 2019. Amy also founded @Medic_Minds on social media to enable narratives of the mental health of healthcare professionals to be shared. Amy is continuing her academic studies at Sheffield Institute for Translational Neuroscience.